APM009 1716	Markwell, Kevin; Stevenson, Deborah; Rowe, David	Explorations in 'event ecology': case of the International Gay Games	Mega-events increasingly shape and reinforce the identities and economies of cities and nations. Major sporting events such as the Olympic Games attract enormous interest, consume vast resources and generate substantial material and cultural capital. In what has become a competition of place and identity, an ecology of events can be discerned which highlights the considerable differences that exist between events in terms of their nature and internal objectives and their intersections with the discourses and politics of host cities. Through a study of selected gay and mainstream media coverage of the International Gay Games held in Sydney in 2002, this paper explores the consequences of, and deep contradictions inherent in, an agenda of cosmopolitan advocacy that requires the endorsement of different publics with competing interests. APM009 1718	Markwell, Kevin; Waite, Gordon; Gorman-Murray, Andrew	Challenging heteronormativity in tourism studies: locating progress	This article reviews work that challenges heteronormativity in tourism studies primarily from, but not restricted to, the discipline of geography. Indeed, tourism studies has benefited greatly from the growth of interdisciplinary research between geography, anthropology, sociology, as well as more recent interactions with queer, gender and leisure studies. In this context, as geographers, our aim is to use an explicitly geographical perspective to provide critical insights into recent research which contests, reinforces, or omits to challenge heteronormative positions in tourism studies. To this end, we provide four thematic 'locations', or scales, through which to review progress of this inter-disciplinary and multi-disciplinary literature: the globalization of sexuality, marketing the (homo)sexualized nation, touring the (homo)sexualized city, and the tourist body as a gendered and sexed subject. APM011 1658	Raj, Hari	Matthew Mitcham plays a new tune : back on board	Mitcham is deep in preparation for the Commonwealth Games in July, completing an undergraduate degree at Uni of Sydney, and rehearsing for his new cabaret show for the Melbourne Cabaret Festival. I decided as an 18 year old to be open and honest with everybody. The cabaret tells the story of his history of depression, drug abuse and drug addiction. Shame isn't helpful. Shame just stops you getting the help you need.		Weekly Review, The - formerly Melbourne Times			1, 12, 13	4/06/2014
